Chapter 1

I answered the door, took one disgusted look at the men in black, and yelled for my parents.

Storming up to my second-floor, totally-cool—but that didn't help right now—bedroom, I threw myself on the bed, grabbed my earbuds, and hit play for my favorite track-du-jour. Knowing my FBI parents were going to be abandoning me—yet again—to take on another assignment, didn't improve my already depressed state. After all, it's not every day a girl gets dumped twice.

No! I know what you're thinking and I was not cheating on anyone. My boyfriend, Dillon, was the cheater. And my supposedly-best girlfriend, Shawnelle, was the cheatee. So, it feels like she dumped me, too, only I just found out today.

I know, I know, it all sounds like a bad movie, but hey, it's my story and I'm calling it like I saw it, or felt it really, like a punch in the gut. It's truer than I could have ever imagined or believed about either of them, but I saw them all right. If I hadn't been walking around the stadium picking up trash (that's another story) due to my own idiocy, I would have never caught them looking oh-so-cozy under the bleachers. . . .

Someone was pounding on my door and yelling my name. Oh . . . Mom. I got up, expecting to be in trouble for something (trouble just seems to find me, but it was usually harmless trouble), yanked out my earbuds, and opened the door.

“We need to talk.”

Yup, sounds like trouble. I rolled my eyes and followed my mom down the stairs.

I was curled up in a closed-off position on my favorite big, cushy chair. Mom and Dad sat across from me on the couch. They didn't look mad. Maybe I wasn't in trouble. Uh oh, this could be worse.

“Chloe, you are old enough not to need Edmund with you, except for body-guarding—obviously.”

Duh, yeah, I'm seventeen. Well, almost.

“. . . but we want you to be safe, since we need to go on an extended assignment to a remote location. No contact by phone or email. Super top-secret. We trust you to keep that to yourself, as always.”

Dad jumped in. He loves to talk. “Aunt Kari is happy to have you stay with her this summer while we're gone. The timing couldn't be more perfect, since we should be back before school starts up again, and”

Oh, this is just great! Not!

Perfect Love

“. . . Blah, blah, blah . . .” I didn’t hear anything they said after that. I was busy freaking out about my summer plans—but wait—those were ruined today, right? Why do I even care? Aunt Kari lives in the mountains of Colorado, and I should be glad to get away from my life for a while. But the whole summer? And maybe no Edmund, but definitely chaperoned. Aaargh!
